The Cultural Collections Projects Program (CCPP) provides a unique opportunity to become involved with the University’s thirty-one cultural collections. The collections are diverse and include museum, art, archive, library and science collections, the majority of which relate to the various disciplines that have historically been taught at this University.
Under the direction of curators, archivists, librarians and collection managers you will be able to work on a collection management project that directly engages with one of the collections. You will have the unique opportunity to expand vocational skills, enrich your learning experience or fulfil an interest while adding real value to the collections by contributing to their future management, preservation and appreciation. The projects vary and may include cataloguing, exhibition creation and interpretation, research, archive and records management, significance assessment and preventative conservation.

You may choose to undertake a placement to satisfy course requirements (such as an internship subject), or you may participate in a project as a volunteer to develop professional skills or simply to pursue a personal interest.

The list of projects available is accessible through the Cultural Collections website, where you will find detailed information on the projects and how you can apply. If you think that the Program may be of interest to you, then please visit our website at http://www.unimelb.edu.au/culturalcollections/projects/ to see the full list of projects available.
If you would like further information about the Cultural Collections Projects Program please contact:

Helen Arnoldi
Cultural Collections Projects Coordinator
Cultural Collections, Baillieu Library
The University of Melbourne, Victoria 3010 Australia
T +61 3 8344 3103
E harnoldi@unimelb.edu.au

For more information on the University of Melbourne’s cultural collections, see http://www.unimelb.edu.au/culturalcollections/